

Jenkins is an open-source continuous integration tool. Its notable features are its easy to set up, provides numerous features and plugin supports, free of cost, reliable market reputation. This tool is reliable and free to use. The tool has a great description to learn how to use and would be a great addition to the company. Sentry is real time error monitor tool. It is trusted by over 1 million developers, a well-established real-time error monitoring tool that has great documentation for multiple languages, a sandbox on their website for practice and training. Sentry is not free and starts at 19$ a month. It would be a great tool to use for error monitoring.

Jenkins's documentation is well written and explains the basics for the software. It has an easy to follow tutorial and useful resources. Their documentation goes through the whole process well in depth.

Sentry has great documentation for over 92 languages and a sandbox to learn the ropes on their website. They have an easy-to-follow layout and tutorial on the sandbox as well.

Jenkins was started in 2004 and has over 300k installs of their software. Jenkins is a open source software that is updated often.